

The Rain Summary:

"Rain" by W. Somerset Maugham is a short story that revolves around a group of travelers stranded on a remote island in the South Pacific due to bad weather. Among them are a zealous missionary named Reverend Davidson and a prostitute named Sadie Thompson. The story explores themes of hypocrisy, morality, and the clash between religious beliefs and human desires.

As the rain continues to pour outside, tensions rise between Sadie and the missionary. Reverend Davidson becomes increasingly frustrated with Sadie's defiance, while Sadie resists his efforts to save her soul. The story reaches its climax when Reverend Davidson confronts Sadie in her room, leading to a tragic and unexpected conclusion.

Quotations:

1. "The rain beats down like a whip on the naked bodies of the people." - Narrator
  2. "The trouble with you, Sadie Thompson, is that you're living in sin." - Reverend Davidson
  3. "I'll be good, Mr. Davidson, I promise I will, only don't pray against me." - Sadie Thompson
  4. "She was a vicious, vulgar, brazen hussy." - Reverend Davidson
  5. "For a moment, she was almost pitiful." - Narrator
  6. "The rain never stops." - Narrator
-